

ABSTRACT

5 Nine novel genes sustaining hydrophobic domains, which are estimated to be seven transmembrane domains characteristic to G protein-coupled receptors, are successfully isolated by human tissue cDNA screening. These genes and proteins which are the expression products thereof are usable in screening ligands, screening agonists or antagonists which are useful as drugs, diagnosing diseases in which these gene participate, etc.